Description:

In 1974 the bodywork of the Porsche 911 was extensively revised for the first time. The most striking feature of this 911 generation are higher bumpers with black plastic bellows, which gave the G-model its nickname „Faltenbalg-Porsche“. The higher bumpers of the G-models were a result of stricter registration regulations in the USA, which prevented damage to the body in an impact of at least 8 km/h.

From 1984 to 1989, approximately 76,473 911 Carrera 3.2 liters were produced, of which 35,670 were coupés.

This 911 Carrera 3.2 liter coupe was built for the European market and delivered in Andorra on July 4th, 1987. The Porsche returned to Germany a few years ago. It's well-documented history can be proven by the original service booklet and existing invoices. With a total mileage of just 54,815 km, its appealing color scheme and a well-kept condition, this Porsche 911 is rarely found.
